C69 2006j OCLC Number: (OCoLC)70807128 Subject: Technological innovations -- Economic aspects -- United States. Excerpt: . . . 13 The Committee continues to be concerned about the increasing costs of science projects and the dwindling public support and understanding of them. Many of these projects have taken on inter-national partners to share the costs. An example of this type of partnership is represented in the International Polar Year (IPY) 2007 - 2008. The IPY is envisioned to be an intense, coordinated campaign of polar observations, research, and analysis that will be multidisciplinary in scope and international in participation. The National Academy of Sciences report, A Vision for the Inter-national Polar Year 2007 - 2008, has recommended that U. S. ef-forts should excite and engage the public to increase understanding of the importance of the polar regions in the global system and ad-vance general science literacy in the Nation. This recommendation is consistent with the underlying objectives of the bill to encourage more students to consider careers in science, technology, engineer-ing, and mathematics. The exotic polar regions capture the imagi-nation of many people and, therefore, engage the public, including students. Section 102. Study on barriers to innovation Section 102 would require the National Academy of Sciences to conduct a study to identify forms of risk that create barriers to in-novation, one year after enactment of this bill and every four years thereafter. The study is intended to support research on the long-term value of innovation to the business community and to identify means to mitigate legal or practical risks presently associated with such innovation activities. The provision was derived from...
