Excerpt: . . . bers thereof all gifts, legacies, bequeaths, revenues, lands and donations. As these feoffees were a selfperpetuated body, viz. the magistrates and ministers of the six neighboring towns, this act was complete. in all the essentials of a charter. Here then we have the college complete in its foundation and incorporation. The board created by this charter had full power and authority to make and establish all such orders, statutes, and constitutions, as they shall see necessary for the instituting, guiding and furthering the said college, and c. It is true no power is expressly given the overseers to sue or be sued, or have a common seal, but these, it is well known, are incidents, which are tacitly annexed of course, as soon as a corporation is duly erected. Now under this charter, and previous to the charter of 1650, there were Fellows at the college, who, with the President, were maintained from its funds. This, in the first place, is asserted in the charter of 1650, for notwithstanding your disparaging remarks on the value of preambles, which I shall presently consider, it is not to be supposed that the preamble to the charter of 1650 asserts a falsehood. Now that preamble says, that many well disposed persons have been and daily are moved and stirred up to give and bestow sundry gifts, legacies, lands, and revenues for the advancement of all good literature, arts and sciences, in Harvard college in Cambridge in the...
